SEPTA investigating new subway glass doors

Safety. Sliding glass subway station doors are used in Moscow, Hong Kong and London. Is Philly next?

SEPTA officials are on the fence about building walls of glass doors on its subway platforms.

The doors would separate SEPTA riders from Market-Frankford Line and Broad Street Line train cars — sliding open when the train arrives, and closing when the train departs.

The project's proponents say the doors would pay for themselves with advertising. SEPTA, which has had doubts about the plan, recently renewed agreements with ad-sales company Titan Outdoor, which controls advertising on its subway stations.

The company that makes the glass walls, TIS Inc., based in Seoul, Korea, says it will manufacture and install the glass walls at its own cost, and make its money back from advertising on digital monitors affixed to the walls.

City Councilman David Oh, who's been working to bring more Asian investment to Philadelphia, first introduced TIS to the transit authority. Oh said he met with the company on a trip overseas and became interested in its plight to move overseas and set up meetings with local officials.

The screens act as dividers between the cars and the riders. Extending from the platform to the ceiling, the company claims these screens would help prevent suicides as well as improve safety, lighting, and efficiency.

Platform screen doors would resemble the type installed at a Malaysian subway station. / WIKI COMMONS

Quote

"It's cleaner. It smells better. It looks better. It's more efficient. It's safer. It's brighter."

David Oh

Underground stations would get full-sized screens, while outside platforms would get partial dividers.

Philadelphia workers would install the screens.

SEPTA Assistant General Manager Francis Kelly said the glass walls "are an option we're looking at, but it has to work for us."

Oh said he hopes SEPTA, the Korean firm and Titan can work out an agreement. No ad revenue, he said "might kill the deal."

Glass walls or screen are used in subways from London to Hong Kong. "It has to fit into what we do here," Kelly said. He warned that SEPTA couldn't afford to build glass walls by itself, or make major modifications so the doors can fit stations.

Logan. Microwave blows off boy's fingers

A boy in Logan lost three fingers after he put an object in the microwave that caused it to explode, 6 ABC Action News reported.

A Philadelphia Fire Department spokeswoman confirmed that at 4 p.m. Saturday a single engine and medic unit responded to a home on the 1300 block of Windrim Avenue.

An 8-year-old boy with a hand injury was transported to St. Christopher's Hospital for Children for treatment.

The fire is under investigation by the Fire Marshall's office, the spokeswoman said.

According to ABC, the boy lost three fingers on his right hand, suffered burns to his hand and his arm was fractured.

The type of object that caused the explosion was not disclosed.

No information was available about whether anyone else was inside the house at the time of the fire.

A spokeswoman for St. Christopher's Hospital declined to comment on the boy's condition Sunday, citing patient privacy laws.

BEEN INJURED?

AUTO ACCIDENTS • SEPTA ACCIDENTS • MEDICAL MALPRACTICE

Did You Know?

More than 200,000 people die each year due to improper medical care? Whether by unnecessary surgery, medication errors, infection or adverse effects of medications, the number of people injured by medical malpractice is simply astounding.

One might ask, "How will I know if I have a Medical Malpractice Case?" Medical Malpractice can occur when a health care provider breaches the accepted standard of care by either committing a negligent act or failing to act when required. You must also prove that the health care provider's negligence caused you injury. Lastly, you must show proof that you actually suffered the harm.

Don't be afraid to ask your health provider questions. It's your life and aren't you worth it?

Decision on Kane charges could take DA months

Politics? The attorney general's lawyer says she's being "railroaded" by Republican men.

A grand jury recommendation of indicting Attorney General Kathleen Kane on criminal charges must be reviewed by the Montgomery County district attorney before the charges can be filed. A decision could take months, reports say.

"I did nothing wrong. Period. Any fair and impartial review of the evidence would conclude that," Kane said in a statement emailed to the media on Friday.

The grand jury's recommendations include charges of perjury and contempt of court against Kane for leaking a memo from a previous grand jury investigation to the press, the Inquirer reported, based on anonymous sources.

The grand jury presentment must be reviewed by Montgomery County DA Risa Vetri Ferman, who will decide whether to press charges. Such a review could take months, the Inquirer reported.

At a press conference Saturday, Kane's defense attorney, Lanny Davis, announced Kane would not resign even if criminal charges are filed against her.

Davis said the charges are politically motivated and that Kane, a Democrat and the first woman elected attorney general in Pennsylvania, is being "railroaded" by male Republicans, the Inquirer reported.

The Supreme Court justice who ordered the grand jury, the judge supervising the grand jury and the special prosecutor in charge of the grand jury leak investigation are all Republicans.

The Morning Call reported the grand jury will now investigate whether Kane threatened officials who criticized her for the release of pornographic emails exchanged within the office of the attorney general and other state agencies.

Kane eventually did release the images, leading to the resignations of about 20 men, including state Supreme Court Justice Seamus McCaffery.

Missing. Search for teacher Chris Tully spreads across area

When Matthew Kraft heard that Christopher Tully, his former high school technology teacher was missing, he did what his mentor taught him: he made a website.

Kraft, 28, who studied under Tully at Middle Bucks Institute of Technology in Warwick, Bucks County in the early 2000s, launched HelpFindTully.com about three days after his friend vanished.

Tully, 40, a father of three boys, taught at MBIT for 12 years. He was last seen Tuesday jumping out of his parent's car along the City Avenue bridge near Ridge Avenue and Lincoln Drive near East Falls.

Tully's parents were taking him to get help for depression when he jumped out of the car. Police said Tully suffered from bipolar disorder and was off his medication.

AARON STALLWORTH JR.

The website, which has only been up for two days, has registered close to 10,000 page views.

"This is the most successful (website) launch we've ever had," Kraft said. "This many hits in this short amount of time is incredible."

Police said Tully's credit cards and cell phone have not been used since he disappeared.

Northeast. The three men were found just before midnight on Saturday.

Three men were found executed in Northeast Philadelphia Saturday night, police said.

Police said the three men, described as being in their 30s and 40s, were found at 11:30 p.m. inside a first-floor apartment on the 4600 block of Vista Street in Holmesburg.

Each was shot in the head.

According to 6ABC, the trio were killed "execution style."

Police said two of the victims were Hispanic and one was Asian.one was described as Asian.

No other details the were available.

The identities of the three men have not been released.

A sign in the home's front window read: "Trespassers will be shot. Survivors will be shot again."

The shootings are part of a trend of violence in Philadelphia's Northeast neighborhoods.

In January 2014 a mother and her son were found dead inside their Lawncrest home with execution-style gunshot wounds to the head. In February, three people were also killed in the same execution-style.

And in August, on the 4700 block of Vista Street, two elderly women were found shot to death with gunshot wounds to the head.

"We all agree that we need to put in place better control on certain passengers, on the basis of objective criteria and with respect for fundamental liberties and without disrupting cross-border travel." Holder

President Barack Obama will invite allies to a Feb. 18 security summit in Washington to try and prevent violent extremism, Attorney General Eric Holder said on Sunday after meeting his European counterparts in Paris.

"We will bring together all of our allies to discuss ways in which we can counteract this violent extremism that exists around the world," Holder told reporters.

French Interior Minister Bernard Cazeneuve said after the meeting that European interior ministers had agreed to boost cooperation in an effort to thwart further jihadist attacks.

Holder said Europe needed urgent progress in establishing a European Passenger Name Record database, which would facilitate the exchange of data about passengers between member states.

"We are convinced of the need for such a tool, to follow those who travel to terrorist operating theaters or who return from there," he said, adding that this database would also be useful in the fight against other serious crimes.

Cazeneuve said the Internet needs to remain a space for free expression, but that Europe should fight against abusive use of the Web to spread hate speech, anti-Semitic messages and the recruiting of vulnerable young people for violence. REUTERS

Iran says it will examine with US ways to speed up nuclear talks

Iran and the United States will explore ways to give impetus to nuclear talks when their chief diplomats meet in Geneva on Wednesday, Iranian Foreign Minister Mohammad Javad Zarif said on Sunday.

Lower-level negotiators on both sides will meet at the same venue on Thursday to iron out technical details ahead of negotiations on Jan. 18 between Iran and the six powers grouped under "P5+1" — the United States, France, Germany, Russia, China and Britain.

Speaking at a Tehran news conference, Zarif said the purpose of the talks with John Kerry "is to see if we can speed up and push the negotiations forward." REUTERS

Court to weigh new religious rights case

Arizona. The case is not as contentious, with the town receiving little support.

The Supreme Court on Monday will take up a new religious rights case when it considers whether a town in Arizona discriminated against a local church by forcing it to remove signs notifying the public of its worship services.

The nine justices are set to hear a one-hour argument in an appeal filed by the Good News Community Church, which objected to its treatment by town officials in Gilbert, Arizona. The church says its free speech rights, protected by the U.S. Constitution's First Amendment, were violated.

The church's leader, Pastor Clyde Reed, says the town's 2008 sign ordinance treated religious messages differently than other types of signs. The ordinance has different categories, based on content, that determine the size of the sign, where it can be placed, and how long it can be displayed.

The church's signs were deemed to be event signs, which meant they received "far worse treatment" than other types, including those displaying political and ideological messages, its lawyers said.

The town's lawyers asked the court not to hear the case, in part because a new, less restrictive ordinance was enacted in 2011.

The church is represented by the Alliance Defending Freedom, a conservative Christian group.

Solicitor General Donald Verrilli, the Obama administration's top Supreme Court lawyer, said in court papers that the ordinance was clearly unconstitutional because it favors one type of speech over another. REUTERS

Gunman in Idaho shooting spree had multiple weapons

A 29-year-old man who killed three people and critically wounded another during a shooting spree in the northern Idaho city of Moscow had five weapons in his car, police said on Sunday.

John Lee, 29, was arrested after the Saturday shootings when he crashed his car during a high-speed chase with police. Inside his Honda Fit, authorities later found three handguns, a shotgun and a rifle, said Moscow Police Chief David Duke.

Lee has been charged with three counts of first-degree murder and one court of attempted murder, Duke said.

The motive for the shootings was not known, Duke said. He said authorities would likely seek to search a laptop computer that was also removed from Lee's vehicle.

The shootings occurred in rapid succession.

Lee, a resident of the city, is believed to have first killed his mother at her home before driving to an office building and shooting and killing his landlord, and wounding another man who was in the landlord's office, Duke said.

Lee then drove to an Arby's restaurant and asked to see the manager, before shooting and killing the 47-year-old woman, he added. REUTERS

Christie may reach for reset button in NJ State of State

New Jersey Gov. Chris Christie, under pressure to decide whether to seek the Republican nomination for president in 2016, has a chance next week to reset his governorship after being stymied by controversies and fiscal crises.

On Tuesday, Christie will deliver his State of the State address, potentially the biggest speech he'll make before announcing his presidential intentions.

After a difficult year, Christie may "try to regain some momentum and frame his tenure, both for the New Jersey audience as well as the national audience," said Ben Dworkin, who heads a New Jersey politics institute at Rider University. REUTERS

AirAsia flight's black box found by divers, marked for retrieval

Clues. The black box should help answer why the plane crashed en route to Singapore from Surabaya, Indonesia.

Search teams found the black box from the crashed AirAsia jetliner, which will help investigators unlock how QZ8501 plunged into the Java Sea with 162 people on board.

Divers identified the location of the black box and marked the area for retrieval, Transport Ministry spokesman J.A. Barata said Sunday, without specifying the exact location. The cockpit-voice recorder and flight-data recorder are together known as the black box.

"The black box records critical aircraft flight parameters," said Mark D. Martin, chief executive officer of Dubai-based Martin Consulting LLC.

Flying at 32,000 feet, the plane's pilot had asked to rise to a higher altitude, citing clouds, officials have said. By the time air traffic controllers responded some two minutes later there was no reply from the plane. There were storms along the plane's flight path, yet other planes managed to fly through the same area at the same time without incident.

Safety advocates have been pushing for years to improve black boxes by enabling them to float and stream data to ground stations in real time. BLOOMBERG

Wichita County. Camel tramples two people to death in Texas

A male camel in rut trampled two people to death at the Camel Kisses farm in north Texas, KFDX television station reported on Sunday.

A man had entered a pen holding a male and two female camels at the farm near Wichita Falls on Saturday, KFDX said. The male then charged the man, identified as Mark Mere, 53.

The farm's owner, Peggye McNair, 72, tried to close the gate to the pen but was also stomped, the Wichita County Sheriff's Office told the television station.

"It appears that both victims were trampled by the camel," police said in a statement, according to the Times Record News in Wichita Falls, located about 150 miles northwest of Dallas.

McNair, a former bank executive, had raised camels for nearly two decades, often welcoming children at her camel ranch, the newspaper said.

Mere entered the pen because a water trough was frozen over, Wichita County Sheriff David Duke told KFDX. Authorities were given permission to put down the male camel.

A history of Tina and Amy

2001: Amy joins "Saturday Night Live," where head writer Tina has been since 1998.

2004: Tina and Amy become the first all-female anchor team on SNL's "Weekend Update."

2008: Tina and Amy slay while presenting at the Emmys, making the case for their eventual Golden Globes gig.

2013: Tina and Amy host the Golden Globes for the first time, upping the ratings for the telecast to 19.7 million. The previous year, Ricky Gervais had brought in 16.8 million.

2015: Tina and Amy say goodbye to the Globes and to each other — for now. They'll be back together in theaters with "Sisters."

Everything is awkward at this year's Golden Globes

Awards. Tina Fey and Amy Poehler's last stint hosting the Globes was during a weird year.

The reigning theme on the red carpet of this year's Golden Globes might have been red gowns, but inside the Beverly Hilton it was awkwardness — horrible, painful awkwardness. Even veteran hosts Tina Fey and Amy Poehler couldn't escape the cringe-inducing atmosphere in the hotel ballroom, especially when launching into dueling Bill Cosby impressions.

Of course, the real point of the night was the awards. In the world of TV, things were less awkward than they were surprising, as "Jane the Virgin" star Gina Rodriguez surprised awards prognosticators by taking Best Actress in a Comedy or Musical. Joanne Froggatt brought home her first Golden Globe, a Supporting Actress trophy, for "Downton Abbey," taking home an award her co-star Maggie Smith previously won. But the big winner of the night was freshman FX drama "Fargo," which earned an award for the show itself and supporting actor Billy Bob Thornton.

On the film side, the indie film presence was strong, with J.K. Simmons winning Best Supporting Actor for his work in the Sundance hit "Whiplash," while "The Theory of Everything" won Best Score.

Even before the show began, hosts Fey and Poehler confirmed that this go at hosting the awards — their third in a row — would be their last. "Next year they should go with someone younger and easier to work with, like a Japanese hologram," Poehler joked on the red carpet. Maybe next year's will be less awkward.

Tina Fey and Amy Poehler returned to hosting duties at the 2015 Golden Globes. PAUL DRINKWATER, NBC)

The most painful Globe moments

1. Jennifer Lopez and Jeremy Renner: While presenting, Renner said that Lopez had "the globes," meaning her boobs. Classy!

2. Competing Cosby impressions: Amy Poehler and Tina Fey broke the seal on Bill Cosby jokes early, but segued into trying to get his voice right while the audience cringed.

4. The lack of A/C: This was also a remarkably shiny Golden Globes, too, with presenters, winners and random audience members looking very, very sweaty.

Ready for more 'Walking Dead'?

AMC / YOUTUBE

We've still got four weeks to go until "The Walking Dead" returns to finish out season five, but that doesn't mean AMC can't give you something to slake your thirst. Like, for instance, this arty teaser with an ominous Rick Grimes (Andrew Lincoln) voiceover about the importance of survival and togetherness. The brief, slow-mo-heavy clip features the main cast using a whole lot of bullets as they run through a smoky forest — which as anyone who watches the show knows is a terrible, terrible idea, since loud noises like gunfire just attract more zombies. Also, slow motion is probably not a great idea either.

Blake Lively's having fun with the baby news

So maybe the real reason Blake Lively held off on announcing the birth of her daughter for a couple of weeks was so that she could punk her friends. When asked about Lively's big news, her "Sisterhood of the Traveling Pants" co-star Amber Tamblyn responds with a measured, "That bitch! She tricked me," according to People magazine. Tamblyn recently visited Lively's Bedford, New York home totally unaware that the nursery was now occupied. "I went up there and I didn't know. Everybody knew but me, and she does that s— to me," Tamblyn explains. "She was texting me about wallpaper. She was like, 'You've got to come see my new wallpaper.' And I went up there, and there was her baby." Enjoy it while you can, Blake, because that trick only works so many times.

2 Cosby lets rape protesters 'have their say'

You may be not at all surprised to learn that Bill Cosby's recent run of shows in Canada did not end without incident. At the final performance in Hamilton, Ontario Friday night, protesters staged a 30-person walk-out, chanting, "We believe the women," according to the Hollywood Reporter. One even reportedly shouted, "You're a piece of s—, you rapist." While the protesters were met with a swift security escort, Cosby himself pleaded for calm, urging, "Stop, let them have their say."

Earlier in the night, Cosby had said, "Whatever happens here tonight, if there's some sort of outburst we just need to keep calm and it doesn't have to last that long." He probably could've phrased that better.

"Whatever happens here tonight, if there's some sort of outburst we just need to keep calm and it doesn't have to last that long."

3 Yeah, about those 'un-retouched' Justin Bieber pics

So those supposedly original photos from Justin Bieber's Calvin Klein photo shoot showing a much skinnier and less well-endowed Biebs that hit the Internet late last week? Totally fake. Maybe the fact that they were leaked to a Web site you've never heard of before should've been a clue. Or maybe a closer look at Bieber's crotch — and again, I'm really sorry I have to keep suggesting you look at that — would have clearly shown that the "un-retouched" photos were actually more Photoshopped than the official versions. That Web site, Breatheheavy.com, by the way, removed the image and posted a retraction, saying it had received a cease and desist letter.

MEET YOUR GOALS WITH A FIRM BUT GENTLE PUSH

PLUS

Be supportive

Give yourself unconditional love

A good parent sees the best in their children and is forgiving of their foibles. Commit to being kind and loving to yourself no matter what. Did you meet your goals? Great. Celebrate your successes. But if you miss the mark, as people often do, remind yourself that you are still lovable.

KIM SCHNEIDERMAN, MSW, LCSW

NOVEL-PERSPECTIVE.COM

Kim Schneiderman's book "Step Out of Your Story: Writing Exercises to Reframe and Transform Your Life," is due to be published in the spring. Email Kim your questions at askkim@metro.us.

An ambitious, go-getter client of mine often berates herself when she doesn't achieve all her goals for the week, even when she encounters setbacks beyond her control. Although I counsel her to be kind to herself, she worries that cutting herself slack is just an excuse for not doing enough.

It's an understandable concern, especially in the new year, when people feel a need to make big changes in the areas of their life where they feel dissatisfied — perhaps their diet, work, relationships or living situation. Yet, while some believe that mental self-flagellation will spur them into action, it usually leaves them feeling zapped of the precious energy needed to push forward.

That's why every new year's aspiration should be accompanied by a resolution to be gentler with ourselves, especially when progress doesn't happen on our timetable. The question is, how do we discipline ourselves without becoming our own worst enemies? And how can we be kind to ourselves without lapsing into complacency?

The key is to become a firm but loving parent… to yourself. Try these good parenting techniques that strike a balance between discipline and compassion.

Practice patience

Change takes time. Sometimes we expect change to happen faster than it actually does. Giving time for events to naturally unfold can help us stay on track without getting discouraged.

Positivity

Be encouraging

A good parent provides comfort and support to keep their children moving forward, even in the face of obstacles. So when the going gets tough, play inspiring music, find a positive affirmation or call a friend who's always cheering for you.

Establish accountability

Set realistic, achievable goals and check in with yourself regularly to see if you are meeting them. If not, try to figure out what got in the way and make adjustments. When you slip up or get sidetracked, acknowledge your missteps without lapsing into self-recrimination. Once you've reflected on where you went wrong, rededicate yourself to your task, resolving to do things better this time around.

Be flexible

Sometimes, we need to adapt our goals as new situations arise. If your approach isn't working anymore, change tactics.

Study

You can catch a cold just by being cold

Mom, as usual, was right — colder weather makes it more likely you'll come down with a cold.

Scientists at Yale University found that rhinovirus, which causes the common cold, replicates better in the cooler environment of mice's noses than the rest of their warmer bodies. And, specific to the team's research, their immune systems mounted a less effective defense against rhinovirus when they were kept in a cooler environment.

Rhinovirus is present in the noses of about 20 percent of the population at any given time.

"In general, the lower the temperature, it seems the lower the innate immune response to viruses," notes senior author and Yale professor of immunobiology Akiko Iwasaki.

Or, as mom always said, bundle up.

Get ready to return to school in 2015

Preparation. Get organized before hitting the books.

Keeping track of all of your paperwork will make the application process go smoother. / STOCKBYTE

Have you made a New Year's resolution to finally finish (or start) your college degree? Congrats, that's a big step.

Here are some tips for making sure you have all of the information you need well before deadline.

Do some soul searching

What do you see when you picture your dream career? Do you like working with children? With food? In a scientific field? Having a clear goal will make finding (and finishing) a degree easier.

It's also a good idea to start informally interviewing friends and relatives in careers that interest you to get a good sense of what a day in your dream job is like.

Start going to open houses

The new year is a season for open houses and campus visits. See if you can sit in on a class, and remember to talk to currently enrolled students so that you can get the inside story. Added bonus: Some colleges waive certain application fees if you attend an open house.

Research testing dates

Does your program require you to take the SATs or other standardized exams? It's also a good idea to see if the schools on your list have their own math or writing exams that they administer to prospective students.

Order your old transcripts

If you are a returning student, it's important to figure out which of your credits will transfer. Ordering transcripts and gathering recommendation letters can take awhile, so it's good to start the process early.

Extra tip

Do your financial aid homework

Remember to fill out the Free Application for Student Aid and other aid forms accurately. Look for scholarships for which you qualify.

Research tuition reimbursement

Does your current company have any sort of tuition reimbursement program? School is much less stressful when somebody else is footing at least part of the bill.

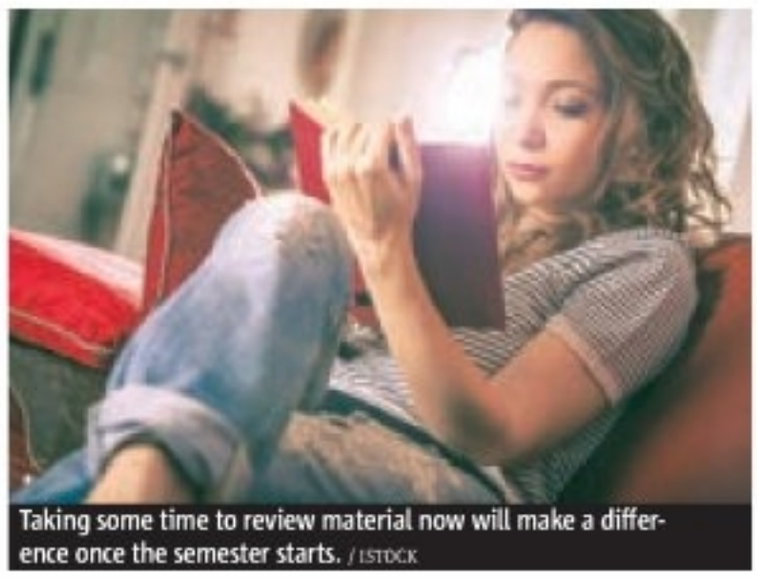
Vacation. Get back into 'school mode' the last week of your break

For most students, this week marks the last few days of a monthlong winter break. Instead of just binge-watching your favorite shows, why not slowly ease yourself back into academic mode?

Here's how you can start.



Taking some time to review material now will make a difference once the semester starts. / ISTOCK

Jump start your reading

Now that the holidays are over, why not take a few minutes to prep yourself for the new semester? If you are taking part two of a science or language class, spend a few minutes each day reviewing your old notes. And if you already have your textbooks for your new classes, you can easily start skimming the first few chapters of your books.

If you're not the most enthusiastic reader, try setting yourself a schedule. You can adjust the time commitment accordingly.

Look for an internship

If you haven't started your summer job or internship search yet, there's no time like the present. Devote an afternoon to checking out postings and start sending out some introductory emails. It's also a good idea to make an appointment with your college's career services office to discuss your options when you get back on campus.

Take a short course

Now is also a good time to see if you can find an online class that relates to your interests or goals.

You don't need to spend money — many introductory courses are available free online, and offer a great way to learn when it's convenient for you. Try mastering a computer program or get started on studying for the GREs. TALENT EGG

How to ask for a raise in 2015

Money matters.
Are you ready to make your move?

Doing your research is key to getting the salary you deserve. / ISTOCK

The art of negotiation takes practice, especially when it comes to younger workers — particularly young women — who are looking for their first raise.

"There are certain cultural assumptions that we take on as women," notes author Jessica Porter. "It's things like 'I don't want to appear greedy to my boss.' Women also often don't have the same access to information as their male peers do."

Along with Deborah Kolb, professor emerita at Boston's Simmons College, Porter is the co-author of the upcoming book "Negotiating at Work: Turn Small Wins Into Big Gains." We asked her how women can get the salary they deserve and move ahead in their careers.

1 Research your competitors. "The first thing I would do is gather as much information as possible," she says. "What do people at other companies make? That's how you know what to ask for."

2 Know your workplace. It's also important to understand how things work at your own company. "What does your boss value?" Porter asks. "What does your boss think is important? If your boss thinks that the income brought in from sales is important, start to think about how you can talk about that."

3 Prepare for a lengthy process. "The longer you can stretch the negotiation process, the more success you are going to have, says Porter. "We think of negotiation as something that takes place in a finite amount of time. That's not true."

4 Remember that you deserve this. "It can really help to reflect on why you are asking for these things," she says. "There's a reason you are asking for what you are asking for."

Letters to the editor

Pen more polite than the sword

Re: 'Be considerate in polite society' (Metro, Jan. 9-11) New ideas and intellectual growth are impossible without questioning and contradicting deeply held beliefs. Just whose sacred beliefs would he have us hold as sacrosanct? Those of white supremacists? Jihadists? Members of the Flat Earth Society? No, Lewis, the function of art is not just to decorate; it helps to gain new perspectives. Furthermore, I can think of a no more "polite" way of disagreeing with someone's beliefs than with a pencil and a piece of paper. Je suis Charlie.
MANDA HEGARDT, VIA EMAIL

In this context Walsh's message is misdirected. The only ones making a mockery of "sacred beliefs" are those who use those beilefs to attack and murder journalists in their offices, or behead captives and post it on YouTube, or assassinate doctors and bomb medical clinics. Walsh is correct when he says there are limits to what any society, "polite" or otherwise, can and should tolerate; the casual use of religion to murder and terrorize is definitely at the top of that list, while artistic mockery of the same should be at the bottom, not vice versa as Walsh would have it.

Midseason grades: No help for Flyers top line

NHL. The Flyers have dug themselves a deep hole in the season's first half.

The Philadelphia Flyers hit the halfway mark of the season with two straight dramatic wins — first in a shootout and then in overtime — but still found themselves with a dismal 16-19-7 record, buried in the Metropolitan Division and 11 points out of a playoff berth.

While there were some standout individual performances and good stretches of hockey, overall it was a disappointing and underachieving first half and the Flyers' grades in their Metro midseason report card will reflect so.

C

Jacob Voracek is the league-leader in points (50) and assists (34), and his breakout season has earned him an All-Star Game invite. Claude Giroux is fourth in the NHL in points (46) and sits tied for second in assists (32) — and he, too, will represent the orange and black in Columbus. Wayne Simmonds has a team-high 16 goals and is second in the league in power-play markers. From there, it's a steep drop-off in production.

A lack of secondary scoring and inconsistency from almost every other forward except the aforementioned trio has turned the Flyers into basically a one-line team.

Goaltenders

R

Steve Mason has played exceptionally well but you can't tell from his paltry 8-12-6 record. In his second season as the team's starter, often he's been the difference between zero, one or two points.

Backup Ray Emery has performed adequately in his role and kept the team afloat by winning five of six games in October, when Mason got off to a rough start.

Don't forget 33-year-old Rob Zepp carried the team to a win over the Jets last month to become the oldest player in the league to win his debut. He is once again back with the squad filling in for the recently injured Mason.

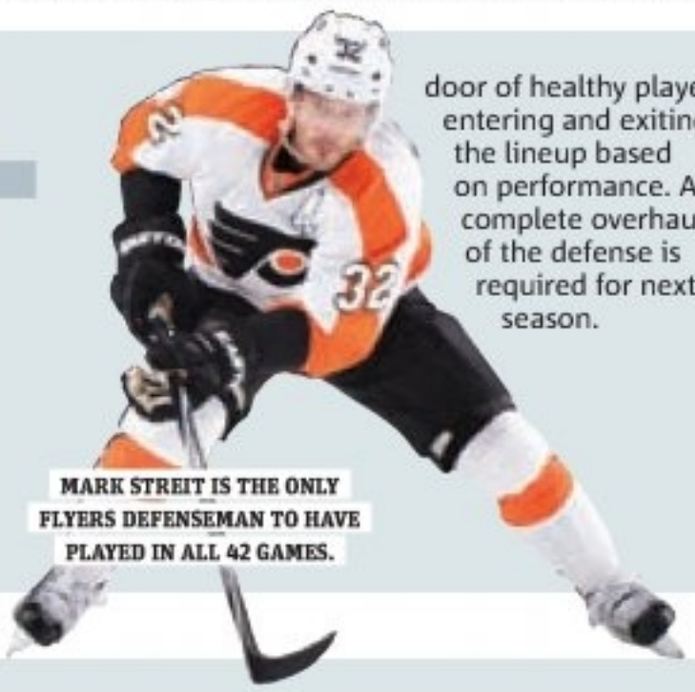
Defensemen

D+

This unit was expected to be the team's weakness and unfortunately it has performed that way.

The Flyers' blue liners are consistently too slow in their own end, too careless with the puck and struggle to clear the zone and start the rush.

For a perplexing stretch in December there was a revolving door of healthy players entering and exiting the lineup based on performance. A complete overhaul of the defense is required for next season.



MARK STREIT IS THE ONLY FLYERS DEFENSEMAN TO HAVE PLAYED IN ALL 42 GAMES.

Coaching

After taking over three games into last season when Peter Laviolette was fired, Craig Berube turned the Flyers into one of the best teams in the league during the final four months and helped guide them to a playoff berth.

With essentially the same roster returning and one that has remained relatively healthy, the Flyers have failed to match that success this year. Berube hasn't yet proven to be a long-term answer behind the bench.

BERUBE'S JOB COULD BE IN JEOPARDY IF HE CAN'T TURN THINGS AROUND.

Special teams

The Flyers power play has remained one of the top units in the league — and is the best in the league at home. The penalty kill, which was tied with Buffalo for worst in the NHL, has cost the Flyers vital points.

NFL Division Sunday

A fantastic weekend of football was capped off by two more spectacular divisional games Sunday afternoon. With the conference championship matchups set here's a look at how the final two teams in the final four clinched their spots.

- Packers 26, Cowboys 21
  Perhaps justice was served to the failed Cowboys, who seemed to convert on a key late fourth-down pass to Dez Bryant near the goalline. Needing to score to reclaim the lead, Dallas was on the wrong end of an overturned call on a pass causing a turnover on downs. Aaron Rodgers had a slow start but threw two second-half touchdown passes to overcome an eight-point deficit. Green Bay will travel to Seattle for next Sunday's NFC title match.

Aaron Rodgers

- Colts 24, Broncos 13
  In a game that saw a veteran star fall and a youthful one rise to lead his team to the AFC title game on Sunday. Quarterback Andrew Luck and the Colts built an 11-point lead that they carried into the fourth quarter before Peyton Manning helped the Broncos add a field goal to make it just a one-posession game. But Manning's accuracy was nowhere to be found (he went just 26 for 46 for 211 yards) and the Colts added three points and hung on to give them a date with the New England Patriots on Sunday. EVAN MACY

Villanova hoops get it done with defense

NCAA. The Wildcats are back on track thanks to suffocating play without the ball.

The Wildcats proved once again Saturday they can win in many different ways. / GETTY IMAGES

This season, the Villanova defense has been downright ferocious. The group can routinely be seen swarming around the ball to force turnovers, hounding opposing shooters into tough, contested shots and turning each possession into a test of wills.

No wonder they're now 15-1 after dismantling DePaul 81-64 on Saturday, a game they led by 34 points with 9:14 remaining.

While many were celebrating the WIldcats' season-high-tying 13 3-pointers — four apiece by Darrun Hilliard (21 points) and Ryan Arcidiacono (14) — the rest were simply mesmerized by the 'Nova lockdown "D."

"I was very proud of that defensive effort," said head coach Jay Wright, whose eighth-ranked club has bounced back from last week's 66-61 overtime loss at Seton Hall to beat St. John's and DePaul by 35 combined points. "We try to recruit guys who come from successful programs knowing it's gonna be easy to get them to buy in to playing defense."

Quoted

"I know I haven't shot it that well, but it hasn't affected how I play and the defense I play. My role has changed throughout my years here."

Ryan Arcidiacono, on his ability to contribute on both sides of the ball

Take Arcidiacono, the plucky 6-foot-3 junior from Langhorne who arrived on the Main Line as a shooter but has evolved into a solid all-around player.

"My coach in high school [Neshaminy's, Jerry Devine] loved offense but also loved defense," Arcidacono said. "He'd take me out when I didn't play defense. It's not about us trying to break the other team. We just want to keep coming at them and coming at them."

For the season, opponents are shooting just 40.2 percent against the Wildcats, who rely on big men Daniel Ochefu and JayVaughn Pinkston to patrol the rim while pesky Dylan Ennis, Hilliard, Arcidiacono and sixth man Josh Hart wreak havoc on the perimeter.

Next up is Xavier, a school with a rich tradition new to the revamped Big East. But these 'Cats don't really concern themselves so much with the opponent as focusing on themselves, especially when it comes to shutting teams down on the defensive end.
